Short description	Portuguese workers with an open-ended contract are entitled to a minimum of 40 hours of continuing training each year. Companies do need to provide 40 hours of certified training per worker in each civil year to at least 10% of the company's employees. In the case of workers with contracts for a specific period of time, the law is applied only when the contracts have more than 3 months and the number of foreseen training hours is aligned with the duration of the contract. The training can be of any type, but it has to be provided either by the employer, by a certified training entity, or by any training institution recognised by the State as a training provider under the National Qualification System. The employer covers the costs of workers' time spent in training and the costs of training provided at employers' initiatives. For this purpose, employers can benefit from existing public support measures or use their own funding. Workers usually cover the costs of training (fees, transport, etc.) attended at their own initiative. The State is responsible for settling the legislation related to the training leave, defining the minimum requirements to be accomplished by the companies (specified in the Labour Code Law n. 7/2009 and following amendments), as well as for monitoring the accomplishment of the legislation by companies.

Operation/management	The State is responsible for settling the legislation related to the training leave, defining the minimum requirements to be accomplished by the companies. The State is also responsible for monitoring the accomplishment of the legislation by companies (the Authority for Working Conditions from the Ministry of Solidarity, Employment and Social Security is the organisation responsible for it) and for the certification of organizations promoting certified training. In the case of regular education (school education) the organisations need to be recognised by the Ministry of Education. The companies may provide 40 hours of certified training per worker in each civil year to at least 10% of the company's employees. To accomplish this, the companies can structure training to be promoted by internal and certified trainers or, contract a certified external provider. In both cases, the company is responsible for covering the costs of workers' time spent in training (using own financing). Concerning the other costs (e.g. fees for participation, materials and equipment) can be supported by own financing or external funding (from European Social Funds, for example). The training provided needs to be promoted by a certified organization by the Portuguese law (that can be the company itself) and needs to follow the rules of the National Qualification Framework to be considered.
Eligible group(s)	Applied to all employees of the private sector with open-ended contract. In case of workers with contract for a specific period of time, the law is applied only when the contracts have more than 3 months and the number of hours previewed is aligned with the duration of the contract. There is specific legislation applied to employees of public organisations. In the case of temporary workers (with fixed-term contract) the obligation of providing training relies on the temporary companies (that usually are human resources companies, specialised in temporary work, outsourcing and recruitment).

Group(s) with preferential treatment	No preferential treatment
Education and training eligible	Any type of education and training is eligible, as long as provided either by the employer or by a Training Entity Certified by the Directorate-General for Employment and Labour Relations (DGERT). It covers all kinds of formal and certified training and levels of qualification.
Source of financing and collection mechanism	The costs can be covered by the own financing of the employer, or the employer can request funding to provide the training. - Employer own financing: In this case, besides covering the costs of workers' time spent in training, the companies could cover the fees for participation (external providers), trainers' fees & materials/equipment (internal providers). - Funding to the employer to provide training: companies can benefit from the structural funds (European Social Funds, for example) to provide the training to their employees. Structural funds can cover the fees for participation (external providers), trainers' fees & materials/equipment (internal providers) and, in some cases, costs related to transport.
Financing formula and allocation mechanisms	The employer covers the costs of workers' time spent in training ("not worked time"). If the training is provided at the employers' initiative, the employer covers the costs of training. If workers attend training at their own initiative, they usually cover the training costs (fees, transport, etc.). Training leave has a minimum duration of 40 hours per year.
Eligible costs	In the case the training is provided by the employer, eligible costs include: Tuition fees/fees for participation (external providers); Supporting materials and equipment; trainers costs (for internal training). These costs can be supported by own financing (of the companies) or external funding (from European Social Funds, for example).
